How StubHub works

Important to know

We're a marketplace – which means we're not selling any of the tickets listed on our site. Instead, tickets are listed and priced by other fans. Once you place your order, we coordinate delivery and payment – so you know you'll get your tickets in time.

Buyer Q and A

Where do these tickets come from?

StubHub is not a ticket broker and we don't own the tickets you purchase on our site. We started StubHub to provide an active marketplace where fans can gather to buy and sell tickets.

The price of tickets in a listing is determined by each individual seller. We're an open marketplace, which allows you to choose from the widest possible selection of tickets.

Who are the sellers?

Among the fans selling tickets on StubHub are:
season ticket holders who cannot attend every game,
licensed ticket brokers,

ticket holders who have changed their plans,

ticket holders who are unable to attend an event

ticket holders with extra tickets to sell.

Sellers may be individuals, businesses, ticket brokers, corporate sponsors, promoters, fan club members, contest winners, or just about anyone who wishes to see their tickets end up in the hands of another fan.

Are there any guarantees?

Yes! Once your order is confirmed by the seller, we guarantee your tickets will be authentic and arrive in time for the event. To learn more, read about our FanProtect™ Guarantee.

Take advantage of price alerts

Can't find the tickets you want? Set a price alert. Tell us what you're looking for, we'll contact you if they become available, so you never miss out.

When you buy tickets on StubHub, we assure your tickets will be authentic and delivered in time for your event.
